OUR MISSION

To Advance U.S. Leadership in International Conservation Through Public and Private Partnerships and By Developing the Next Generation of Congressional Conservation Leaders

IT IS MY GREAT PLEASURE to welcome you to ICCF's 2017 U.S. Congressional International Conservation Inauguration Gala. This evening we are proud to honor the United States' long legacy of leadership in international conservation, as well as to celebrate the Inauguration of the 45th President of the United States and the convening of the 115th Congress.

There are four fundamental elements of good natural resource management, and the United States is a world leader in each of these areas: a well-managed system of natural parks and protected areas, strong political will, good natural resource management laws, and effective enforcement. The United States has tremendous expertise in the management of national parks and protected areas, boasting the oldest and largest natural resource management agency in the world, the Department of Interior. U.S. Presidents and the U.S. Congress throughout the years have demonstrated support for conservation by passing carefully crafted laws and policies and by appropriating funds for international and domestic conservation of forests, wildlife, oceans, and other natural resources.

The 114th Congress, with leadership from the International Conservation Caucus and the Oceans Caucus, has passed two key pieces of legislation: the Eliminate, Neutralize, and Disrupt (END) Wildlife Trafficking Act and the Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated (IUU) Fishing Enforcement Act of 2015.

In addition, the U.S. is sharing its conservation experience and expertise with policymakers and parks managers around the world by building political will and conservation coalitions among policymakers, educating law enforcement personnel and members of the judiciary, and assisting parks personnel in developing comprehensive plans for the management of parks and protected areas. ICCF is proud to support conservation caucuses in 13 countries, where we are supporting policymakers and helping to address each country's specific conservation and development challenges.

As we welcome a new President, Administration, and Congress, we look forward to continuing to collaborate with our partners to educate American policymakers about the importance of international conservation to U.S. interests so that they might continue the long, proud legacy of those who have come before them.

HIGHLIGHT OF IDEAS

Conservation Governance and Leadership

What sets ICCF apart is its niche as the premier organization building political will and driving conservation governance in the United States and internationally. Conservation governance is an often overlooked component of conservation; it is essential, however, because policymakers around the world have such an extraordinary impact on the design and implementation of laws and policies that govern the development and conservation of their countries' natural resources. It is imperative that leaders understand the link between conservation and economic development, poverty alleviation, conflict avoidance, and food and freshwater security.

Policymakers are often overwhelmed by the scope of issues that they must understand and address. ICCF, through its caucus model, brings conservation issues to the forefront of leaders' attention, helps them to recognize that international conservation is directly linked to many other high-priority issues that affect us all, inspires them to take action, and provides education and expertise to facilitate informed conservation decisions. Armed with this knowledge, the U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus continues to demonstrate outstanding conservation leadership...as it has for more than a decade.

ICCF is now exporting this effective caucus model to countries around the globe, building political support for good natural resource management, inspiring improved conservation governance within and among countries on several continents, and educating policymakers to facilitate informed conservation decisions. ICCF, through our International Conservation Corps, is also advancing conservation leadership by sharing U.S. technical expertise with members of the judiciary, security and law enforcement officials, and park managers in partner countries worldwide.

“To waste, destroy, our natural resources, to skin and exhaust the land instead of using it as to its usefulness, will result in undermining in the days of our children the very prosperity which we ought by right to hand down to them amplified and developed.”

PRESIDENT THEODORE ROOSEVELT

ICCF & The U.S. Congressional ICC

Educating Policymakers and Championing Bipartisanship

- ICCF acts as an informal secretariat to the leadership of the U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, directly supporting caucus members with nonpartisan, well researched, and timely educational resources from an unmatched network of business and nonprofit leaders.
- Since 2004, ICCF has helped grow the U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus to include one-third of the U.S. Congress. The inclusive nature of the caucus attracts membership from across the political spectrum, and the foundation's pragmatic approach has made it a strong ally to the caucus.

U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus

- The U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus, the oldest and most developed conservation caucus in the world, benefits from the wealth of knowledge gained by U.S. conservation agencies such as the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. National Park Service over the past 100 years, as well as ICCF's business and NGO partners. The American caucus continues to be inspired by the belief that the U.S. has the opportunity, the obligation, and the interests to advance the conservation of natural resources for this and future generations.

Thanks to outstanding leadership by the U.S. Congressional International Conservation Caucus, the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives unanimously passed the Eliminate, Neutralize, and Disrupt (END) Wildlife Trafficking Act. The bipartisan legislation is designed to combat the growing wildlife trafficking crisis. Original sponsors include Chairman Ed Royce, Founding Co-Chair of the International Conservation Caucus and Chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and Representative Eliot Engel, Ranking Member and fellow International Conservation Caucus member. International Conservation Caucus members Senator Chris Coons and Senator Jeff Flake led efforts in the Senate.

Oceans Caucus Foundation

Fostering Relationships to Enhance Bipartisan Policy Solutions That Protect Our Oceans, Our Coasts, and Our Economy

The Oceans Caucus Foundation (OCF) is an independent program within ICCF U.S. that advances U.S. leadership in international conservation by providing a platform to bring marine governance to the forefront of government leaders' agendas.

Oceans cover 70% of the planet and directly impact economies and populations around the world, but oceans issues often get overshadowed by other economic and national security concerns. The OCF supports the leadership of the U.S. Congressional Oceans Caucus, educating members about the importance of oceans issues and solutions that protect oceans resources and the livelihoods that depend upon them.

The OCF works with its Oceans Council partners to build consensus, seek public/private partnerships to address oceans challenges, and educate Members of Congress and their staff through a series of briefings and workshops highlighting partners' innovative approaches to marine issues. The OCF educational agenda is currently focused on the impact of marine debris and illegal, unregulated, and unreported (IUU) fishing on the global environment and economy.

With Oceans Caucus leadership, The Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated Fishing Enforcement Act was passed into law. The law enhances the enforcement authority of the U.S. Coast Guard and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) to regulate illegal fishing. The bill also increases capacity for inspection, identification, and monitoring of illegal foreign vessels, amends several international agreements to incorporate civil and criminal penalties, and broadens data sharing authority with foreign governments in order to identify and penalize nations that do not comply with fisheries management regulations.

The ICCF Group's International Conservation Corps

Many nations have placed large amounts of terrestrial and aquatic territory into public lands such as national parks, but often lack the human and institutional capacity needed to effectively manage these areas, which are meant to protect each nation's most important natural assets. This lack of capacity is critical to address, because increased population growth and consumption of resources provide an ever increasing pressure on the natural resources that sustain us all.

International Conservation Corps team members are veterans of U.S. and Canadian government agencies such as U.S. National Park Service, U.S. Forest Service, U.S. Bureau of Land Management, and U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service.

International Conservation Corps experts work hand in hand with governmental and non-governmental partners in developing nations to achieve conservation priorities and develop institutional and human capacity. International Conservation Corps sets itself apart from other on-the-ground conservation models because it brings proven practical experience to bear through a responsive model that is both low-cost and scalable, yielding high outputs with relatively low inputs.

International Conservation Corps has operated for three years, deployed to projects in an array of countries including China, Kenya, Colombia, Thailand, the Bahamas, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Mongolia, and others. To date more than $1.2 million in services have been delivered by International Conservation Corps professionals.

International Conservation Corps programs include, among others:

- Partnering with USAID to strengthen the management capacity of Colombia's national park system, especially improving the ability to sustainably support increased tourism to bring much-needed jobs to rural communities; developing a new institutional planning system; incorporating interpretation services at heavily visited parks; strengthening commercial services management; and developing a strategy for a new national training program
- Supporting the AMATA Foundation and Thailand's national park system to improve the management and operations of Thailand's premier national park, towards utilizing the park as a regional learning platform
- Improved management and financial sustainability of national parks in Jamaica and Haiti in collaboration with The Nature Conservancy
- Strengthened capacity of the government of the Bahamas to manage its forests, development of detailed plans to expand three national parks in the Bahamas, and creation of several new national parks
- Supporting the Paulson Institute's work in China to establish a national park service and strengthen the resiliency of coastal wetlands
- Working in Kenya to support the Naibunga Conservancy, which provides critical habitat for some of the Earth's most significant threatened and endangered wildlife species and is a lynchpin wildlife corridor, including a key migration route for elephants

Greg Carr

Greg Carr is the President of the Gorongosa Restoration Project in Mozambique, having signed a 20-year agreement with the Government of Mozambique in 2008 to restore and co-manage Gorongosa National Park. The Gorongosa management team has reintroduced buffaloes, wildebeests, and other species to the ecosystem, planted more than one million trees in the Mt. Gorongosa rainforest, and created the E.O. Wilson Laboratory, an international Restoration Ecology Science Research Center. Harvard, Princeton, Berkeley, Oxford, and other universities are active at the Laboratory.

Additionally, the restoration team reestablished ecotourism in the park, creating local employment and park income. The park's Human Development Department provides health, education, and agricultural assistance to the local communities living near its borders. PBS and National Geographic premiered a six-hour series about the restoration of Gorongosa in September 2015. Greg Carr's work has been featured on CBS' "60 Minutes" and in the Smithsonian, New Yorker, Atlantic, and National Geographic magazines.

Greg Carr is also Co-Founder of the Carr Center for Human Rights Policy at Harvard University and of the Museum of Idaho. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the E.O. Wilson Biodiversity Foundation. He received a Master's degree in Public Policy from Harvard University.
